1. The following is an examiner's statement of reasons for allowance: the prior art of record do not show or suggest, either singly or combined, a reclining backrest with a pivotally connected headrest, where a leading movement of the headrest causes a slight lifting of the backrest, and a recline adjustment device connected to the backrest via an articulated lever, where the articulated lever is caused to act as a rigid lever upon a further lifting of the backrest. Carld and Barcesat each show a backrest with a pivotally attached headrest having a leading movement that causes a lifting of the backrest; however, as the backrest is further lifted, the configuration of the articulated lever changes to raise the backrest to different positions of incline.
